The General Labour Inspectorate was created in 2010, to improve and strengthen the service of labour inspection across the country. Aiming to provide the institution with the necessary technical abilities to the accomplishment of its functions, its statute provided for a special career system, with five categories. Nevertheless, the transitory rule which enabled the Inspectors, under the Public Service's general career regime, to move to the special career's regime already created, did not exist. This diploma, thereby, creates the legal basis to enable the inspectors already working to move to the special careers' regime.
